

Please do not weaken the wisconsin no-call list by allowing banks (or other companies) to continue to call customers 18 months after terminating service with them. My husband and I are retired, he has Parkinson's disease, and it is a frustrating and intrusive imposition on us to rush to the phone only to find that it is a business trying to sell us something. The mail, plus TV and radio ads, provide enough ways to get in touch with us. Also, since seniors are often targeted for dubious telephone offers, we need to have a written explanation before we can make an informed decision.

wisconsin's no-call policy has been our advocate on this question. Please listen to small-voice consumers and not big business. Do not weaken an already successful system, widely appreciated in our State. Thank you.
